In Louisville, Ky., city authorities worked quietly for two full years, preparing the community for desegregation - and then did it in one swift move, without incident.

In Tennessee, an all-white jury convicted seven persons of obstructing justice in the integra-Bockwitz Funeral tion of Clinton High School, Later, the school was dynamited.

Where authorities acted decisively, violence generally failed to SAN JOSE-Mrs. Matilda Bock- halt integration. Lawyers then sought subtler methods of delaying the process or blocking it entirely.

"Pupil placement" was devised different schools. "Interposition" surfaced. This is the argument She was born near Havana that the state is a partner with the federal government and has the right to "interpose" if, in its judgment, the federal government usurps power illegally. Here and there, public schools to do the job.

Elsewhere, too, Southern lawyers pointed to the phrase, "with all deliberate speed," in the Supreme Court ruling ordering desegregation. Thus, they said, had been placed in an agonizingly difficult position.

Almost overnight he was ordered to change his attitudes, habits, customs and deeply rooted traditions - which, moreover, had been supported by law for more than 100 years,

Like an echo of the reconstruction era. Southerners angrily charged that "the North is trying to jam integration down our throats.

Ramifications Many

In the nine years since the court decision, there have been many ramifications in the broad and difficult field of race relations.

The Birmingham struggle, for example, is over Negro demands for desegregation of lunch counters and fitting rooms in the stores, for improved conditions of employment, etc.

In some Southern cities, Ne-groes deposed "Jim Crow," the rule that required him to sit in the back of the buses.

In others, they demonstrated for the right to use swimming pools, libraries, museums. They learned the power of the economic boycott. They used non-violent methods, "sit-ins" and "kneelins" to dramatize and enforce their demands.

If marketing quotas on wheat are approved in the referendum Tuesday, May 21, producers who take part in both the wheat and feed grain programs, can choose to (1) plant feed grain on part or all of the wheat allotment or (2) plant wheat on part or all of the feed grain acres.
